Lord, Aeck & Sargent Promotes Warren Williams to Principal in the Science Studio

ATLANTA, Feb. 13, 2007 – Lord, Aeck & Sargent has promoted Warren L. Williams, AIA, to a position as principal in the architecture firm’s Science Studio.

In his new role, Williams is responsible for overseeing Science Studio projects and for pursuing new client business. Among the projects on which he currently provides his leadership skills are the Georgia Public Health Laboratory in Waycross, to be completed in June; the Florida State University Life Sciences Teaching and Research Building¹, to be completed in Spring 2008; and the University of West Florida undergraduate Science & Technology Building², scheduled for completion in March 2009. Williams joined Lord, Aeck & Sargent as an intern in 1991 and most recently was a project manager.

“Warren leads by positive example, by working hard and by doing great work,” said Larry Lord, FAIA, Science Studio director. “On a daily basis, he succeeds in improving our firm, marketing our firm and providing exemplary service and projects for our clients. We’re proud to recognize him as a principal.”
